I think Alexander K. Trenko's quote means that the best teachers don't just give you all the answers. They help you find the answers yourself. It's like they give you a map, but you have to do the exploring.

I agree with this. If someone just tells you everything, you don't really learn it properly. It's like watching a movie instead of reading the book - you miss out on thinking about the story. If a ~~bad~~ teacher just gives you all the answers, it's boring, and you don't understand why those answers are the right ones.

For example, in history, if the teacher just tells you dates and facts, it's hard to remember them. But if the ~~bad~~ teacher helps you understand why those events happened, it's much easier. It's like if someone tells you "the capital of France is Paris", it's easy to forget. But if you find out what makes Paris important and discover it yourself, you're far more likely to remember.

In English, it's the same. If the teacher explains every word in a story, it's not as fun. It's better if they help you guess the meaning from the context, or ask you questions about what you think the story means. Then you really think about it and understand better. So, I think the best teachers are the ones who teach you how to learn, not just what to learn. They show you the way, but let you discover things for yourself. That's how you really learn and remember things.
