- 1) Many people heard these words of Aristotle. I understand it in that way that it may be difficult to study, but eventually you will feel the sweet of your work.
- 2) I agree with this quotation because I think that every person can reach success in everything if he works hard and never gives up. A lot of people become dissatisfied after facing with the first problem. If it is difficult at first it doesn't mean that you wouldn't be awarded later. I believe that our every mistake leads us to become even ~~more~~ better in school subjects or career.
- 3) We have a lot of examples proving the Aristotle's words. One of them is Hurrem Sultan, the wife of Sultan Suleyman. Turkish soldiers killed Hurrem's family, kidnaped her with many other girls and brought them to the castle as a slaves. Hurrem was called Alexandra before that terrible situation. It was hard to her to change religion, name and learn new language and culture, but eventually she coped with a lot of disgusting situations and became one of the most powerful women in Turkey. Hurrem was self-confident and never made steps back despite on many problems she was struggling with during her education in new country.
- 4) In conclusion, I believe that the award ~~you~~ get after hard working ^{is} worth it even if you are forced to study and ~~you~~ have to try many times again and again. The history and literature show us that the roots of education are bitter, but the fruit is sweet.
