"The roots of education are bitter, but the fruit is sweet." - What does those words of the Famous philosopher Aristotle means? In my opinion, those words ~~are~~ about a hard work. No matter how hard your job or study is, there will be always the prize. This quote is a metaphor - the work is not a pleasant and favorite thing, but it is like a root for plant - without it you will not have the sweet Fruit-prize.

I agree with this quote, because it is true. We need to do a good job to have what we want. I read one quote: "The day you plant the seed is not the day you take the fruits." And I memorized it. It fits perfectly, because it have the same meaning as the first one - you need to work first, ~~for~~ the prize will be later. As the proof of my opinion, I want to give an example from literature.

In the book "Netochka Nezvanova" by F.M. Dostoevskiy. We can see two characters, whose work is music - Ephim and his nameless friend "B". Ephim had very good talent, but because of his narcissistic personality he wanted to play music only in the theaters. But "B" wasn't afraid of ~~hard~~ hard and small jobs - he played music for anyone. After many years, "B" became a successful musician, and Ephim stayed a workless man.

As a conclusion, I want to say that all our dreams ^{are} in our own hands. We need to work hard to provide ways to our dreams. We need to "plant seeds", taking care of them and finally, take the "fruits". We should not be afraid of work, but understand what the suffering and tiredness from it is temporary.
